How to	o Prepare for a Nuclear Attack	233
Wha	at to Do During a Nuclear Attack	234

Introduction

Are You Prepared for a Nuclear Event?

The world stage is heating up, and nuclear powers have begun to sharpen their swords. We all hope that nuclear weapons will never be used, but the number and temperaments of world powers who now have nuclear weapons increases the likelihood that they will be used. Are you ready?

Most of us are not. Many Americans believe that a nuclear attack is not survivable or that they do not have the ability to prepare. They are wrong. This book is written to help you find shelter during a nuclear attack since you need an underground shelter or other heavily sheltered location to wait out the initial radiation fallout.

Start taking notice right now of the many natural underground shelters that are around you every day. Do you take the subway to work? There's an underground shelter. Underground parking lots, the basement in your office building, the tunnel a few miles down the highway... Most states have many underground sites that could become a shelter for you. The important thing is to locate them now, before you need them.

How to Use This Book

This book will be of very little use to you if you simply load it onto your ereader and ignore it until a nuclear event. It is important that you do the work now to locate the structures nearest you and make a plan for your safety.

Other Structures That May Be Near You

In addition to the caves, mines, and tunnels listed here, think through other shelters that may be near you. If you live in a large city, does your local transit system have an underground subway or light rail system? If so, take note of where the tunnels begin. However, never go into these tunnels when the system is operational. Also, some universities have extensive underground systems of steam tunnels, and some even have underground walkways connecting the buildings. Be aware of the possibilities near you at home and when you travel.

About Caves

Many caves in this book are show caves and open to the public. However, also listed are caves that are in their natural state. They may be difficult to locate, so find the ones nearest you now, before you need them. They may also be very dangerous. Low oxygen levels, rockfalls, falling into a hole, getting lost, losing your light, or any one of a hundred other things can be deadly in a cave. It is important to be prepared for any conditions you might encounter. Be prepared, and follow these rules when going into a cave:

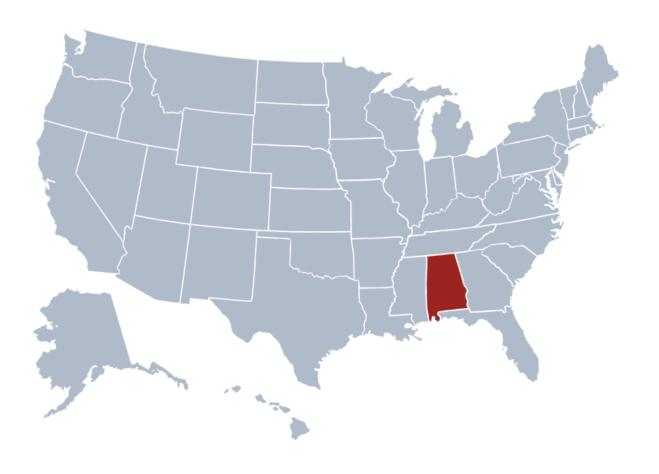

- Always tell someone where you are going.
- Never go in alone take a friend, or preferably two, with you.
- Take the proper gear.
- Do extensive research on the cave before going in.
- Respect the natural environment and wildlife of the cave.
- Take your trash out with you.

About Mines

The mines listed are both historical and operating mines. Be aware that they may not be safe. There could be all kinds of physical and chemical problems that could make the mine unsafe for you and your family. Do your research.

Alabama

Alabama Caves

Alabama has many caves that can serve as a fall-out shelter in case of a nuclear attack. More than 4,700 caves have been documented in Alabama, with at least four that are more than 135 miles in length. Half of Alabama's caves are located in Madison and Jackson counties. However, many of Alabama's caves are on private property, so be sure to get the property owner's permission. Here are some of the largest and most well-known caves.

New Mexico

New Mexico Mines

Estimates are that there are over 15,000 abandoned mines in New Mexico. Many are open pits and quarries, but some are deep shaft mines. Some have been abandoned but are not closed or marked, so be careful when searching for a mine; you could fall in or the mine could collapse.

What to Do in a Nuclear Attack

Nuclear attacks are survivable unless you happen to be at ground zero. The biggest factor that will determine whether you survive or die is how you react. It is absolutely necessary that you find shelter immediately.

There are two kinds of nuclear shelters – blast shelters and fallout shelters:

Blast Shelters

Blast shelters offer protection against the initial effects of the blast, including blast pressure, heat, fire, and initial radiation. They will not withstand a direct hit but offer good protection to those a few miles away. If you see the flash of a nuclear explosion, take shelter in a blast shelter immediately.

Fallout Shelters

Fallout shelters offer protection from radiation after the initial blast. A good fallout shelter offers dense shielding, such as thick walls, and puts distance between you and the fallout particles. An underground area offers more protection than the first floor. In a high-rise building, a spot in the center of the building might be best—more walls between you and the fallout in every direction.

Fallout radiation loses intensity over time. The greatest threat is during the first two weeks. After a few weeks, fallout radiation will have declined to about 1% of its initial radiation levels.

Remember that any shelter is better than none at all. Take advantage of what is available to you.

How to Prepare for a Nuclear Attack

Being prepared is essential. We recommend that you do more research on what to store and how to prepare for a nuclear attack. Here are the basics:

- Learn the warning signs and signals for your community. Know what the signals are, how they will be used, what they mean, and how you should react if you hear them.
- Maintain a disaster supply kit with food, water, medications, and fuel that will support your family for at least two weeks—longer is even better. Keep it easily accessible in case you need to move quickly.
- Locate designated fallout shelters in your community and other suitable shelters. Make a list of potential shelters near your home, office, and schools. Make sure all family members know the nearest shelters and what to do if a warning is given.

What to Do During a Nuclear Attack

If you are close enough to see the flash, you will be hit by a blast shock in about 30 seconds and radioactive fallout within 20 minutes. Take cover from the blast immediately; then move to your fallout shelter.

- Do not look at the flash or fireball—it could blind you.
- Take shelter immediately, taking your two-week supply kit with you. Go below ground or to a heavily sheltered place. If you are outside and away from any buildings or structures when you see the flash, lay flat on the ground or in a ditch or low spot. Shield your head. Stay there until the blast shockwave passes; then seek shelter.
- Keep a battery-powered radio with you, and listen for official information, especially local information.
- Do not leave the shelter until officials say it is safe. Depending on your position and wind patterns, it could take a day or up to a month for radiation levels to drop to a safe level. The heaviest fallout will occur within 24 hours downwind from the explosion.
- Maintain sanitary conditions within your shelter space.

Get prepared now, while the threat is low. If threat levels rise, the cost of food and supplies will rise exponentially. At the very least, you need a two-week to 30-day supply of food for every member of your family and the supplies to sustain life while in a shelter. Plan now, and stay safe.
